TIPS FOR CONTACTING ELECTED OFFICIALS

From the Berkeley Library, University of California [edited for length]

Letters, emails, and faxes are effective ways to communicate with your elected officials.

1. Be Original- Many legislators consider a thoughtful, original letter from a constituent worth 1000 of the pre-written letters or postcards many organizations provide. Feel free to use a pre-written letter as a base and expand on it with your own words.
2. Stay Brief- The maximum length of a letter/email should be 1 page. The letter will most likely be read by a legislative aid and summarized for the legislator, so brevity is best.
3. State Who You Are and What You are Writing About- Identify yourself as a constituent and why you are writing in the first paragraph. Refrain from using lines like "As a citizen and a taxpayer..." If you know the bill by name or bill number, state it in the first paragraph, or even the first line, such as "This letter concerns The Letter Writing Act."
4. Personalize Your Letter/Email- If the legislation you are writing about will affect you personally, tell the legislator. Write a brief personal story about what the legislation will/will not do for you and/or your community.
5. Personalize Your Relationship- The more you can personalize your relationship with the legislator, the stronger your letter/email will be. If you voted for the legislator, worked on his/her campaign, or donated money to the legislator or their party, say so. If you ever met the legislator, briefly mention this in your letter. If possible, attend town halls and other public events your legislator holds.
6. Three Points- In keeping your correspondence short, consider making no more than three main points or less. Flush out your three strongest points and stick with them.
7. Be Respectful- The easiest way to not have your letter read is to be disrespectful. "Dear Idiot" will probably send your letter to the garbage; however, taking a firm position on an issue is fine. Do not use profanity.
8. Include Your Address in Your Signature, Even in Email- Some legislators will take the time to write back, but you should never demand a response. Including your address also affirms the fact that you are a constituent.
9. Proper Address- Sample ways to address your letters:
 1. Dear President (Name):
 2. Dear Senator (Name):
10. Follow up- After contacting your elected official, follow up on what they did. If s/he voted the way you wanted, consider contacting them to thank her/him. If your legislator did not vote the way you wanted, consider contacting them to respectfully express your disappointment. In any follow-up letter/email, mention the fact that you wrote her/him before the vote was taken.
